Shirley is a residential neighbourhood in the suburb of Solihull in the West Midlands, just a few miles away from Birmingham city centre.

The area dates back to the first century and the earth works from an Iron Age Hill Fort can still be seen today. Shirley has come a long way since then and now has a wide range of independent retailers, charity shops and leading high street brands in the area.

With a Sainsbury’s, Asda and Aldi all within easy reach, the suburb offers all of the modern amenities you would expect. Shirley also boasts a public library and a park as well as Bills Wood and Palmers Rough woodland that is popular with walkers and wildlife enthusiasts.

Solihull Retail Park also offers a range of big name shops, so everything is within easy reach of this thriving suburb.
