Factsheet 39

Paying for care in a care home if you have a partner

April 2016

About this factsheet

This factsheet explains how being part of a couple can affect your eligibility for local authority funding assistance if you need to move into a care home. It also looks at you and your partner’s rights to welfare benefits during this period.

This is only a part of the overall residential care means test rules, so this factsheet should be read together with factsheet 10, Paying for permanent residential care.

The information in this factsheet is correct for the period April 2016 – March 2017. Benefit rates are reviewed annually and take effect in April but rules and figures can sometimes change during the year.

The information in this factsheet is applicable in England. If you are in Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland, please contact Age Scotland, Age Cymru or Age NI for information. Contact details can be found at the back of this factsheet.
1 Recent developments
This factsheet is based on the Care Act 2014 and supporting regulations and statutory guidance, introduced in April 2015. The Act was intended to come into force in two stages - in April 2015 and April 2016. However, in July 2015, the Government decided to delay the second stage of the changes until 2020. The delayed changes affect care funding, which means that, in practice, the funding and means test system in April 2016 is similar to the previous system before the Act was introduced.

2 An explanation of terms used in this text

Care homes
This factsheet provides information about ‘care homes’ and ‘nursing homes’. These are the two standard terms used by the Care Quality Commission, which is the industry standards regulator. Nursing homes are care homes where a nurse must be present to provide or supervise medical-type care alongside basic personal care.

Charging regulations and statutory guidance
There are references to the charging regulations and statutory guidance that support the Care Act 2014 (‘the Act’) throughout this text. These set out in detail how a local authority must administer adult social care. The most significant regulations are the Care and Support (Charging and Assessment of Resources) Regulations 2014 (‘the charging regulations’). The other main reference source is the new Care and Support Statutory Guidance 2014 (‘the statutory guidance’).

Local authority
In this factsheet, references to a ‘local authority’ refer to the adult social services department of the local authority or council. It is also used to describe similar departments within: a county council, a district council for an area in which there is no county council, a London borough council, or the Common Council of the City of London.

Partner
A ‘partner’ could be part of a married couple (spouse) or someone in a civil partnership. The term ‘partner’ is used to cover all of these types of arrangements in this factsheet.
3 The local authority financial assessment

If you are in a couple and one of you needs to go into a care home, it is important that you are aware of how the local authority financial assessment (‘means test’) rules work. You also need to know whether you should make new claims for benefits in your own right after one of you has permanently entered a care home.

If you or your partner need to move into a care home with local authority assistance, you are likely to have to pay at least something towards the cost of this from your own capital and/or income.

To obtain financial support from the local authority, they first assess your needs, then agree that you require permanent residential care and confirm you meet the national eligibility criteria. They must document how they are going to meet your needs in a care and support plan.

After this, they will carry out a financial assessment, (the “means test”) to see whether you need to contribute towards funding the placement. For further information on assessment, eligibility and care and support planning see factsheet 90, Introduction to the Care Act 2014.

3.1 Your personal budget

Your care and support plan must include a personal budget if you are going to receive financial support from your local authority. This sets out the cost of meeting your needs, how much you have to contribute and how much the local authority is going to pay, usually on a weekly basis.

Your personal budget must be a realistic figure because the local authority has a legal duty to ensure that your eligible needs are met once it has identified them, in this case relating to the provision of appropriate residential care accommodation.

The statutory guidance states that, to achieve this aim, the local authority must genuinely assess the actual cost of local, good quality, residential care to ensure that the personal budget figure is sufficient in each case.

The local authority must take account of all of your circumstances, be flexible in their approach and be aware of the present availability of local care home provision. On this point, the statutory guidance concludes that ‘the local authority should not set arbitrary amounts or ceilings for particular types of accommodation that do not reflect a fair cost of care.’

3.2 Only your own assets should be taken into account

The statutory guidance confirms that your local authority cannot include capital or income belonging to your partner in your financial assessment. This is because it does not have the power to assess couples or civil partners according to their joint resources - each person must be treated individually.
Local authorities should therefore not generally use joint assessment forms that ask for details of both partners’ finances. However, a local authority may ask for details of your partner’s finances on a separate form to ensure they will be left with sufficient resources to live on when you go into a care home.

3.3 Valuation of jointly owned capital

Savings and the financial assessment

If you have more than £23,250 in capital, you will be required to pay the full cost of your residential care. This figure is known as the ‘upper capital limit’. You might be called a ‘self-funder’ in this context. Capital can take a number of forms, but often relates to your savings. If you have £23,250 or less, you may qualify for some local authority financial assistance.

If you have jointly held savings at the time of your financial assessment the local authority may treat you as owning equal amounts with your partner. Therefore, it could be in your interests to divide any capital into the proportions owned by each of you before the financial assessment takes place.

Example from the statutory guidance

If one member of a couple enters a care home and they have £50,000 in a joint account, the resident is assessed as having £25,000 (50 per cent), which is only £1,750 above the upper capital limit.

However, £3,500 must be spent from the joint account before the overall total falls to £46,500 and the resident’s 50 per cent share falls to £23,250 (upper capital limit). Dividing the joint account at the outset saves the couple having to spend more capital than is necessary before the resident’s assessed share falls below the upper capital limit.

However, the position for jointly owned property is different, see below.

Property and the financial assessment

Capital can include buildings, for example your own home, or land. If you have a jointly owned property asset, it must be assessed based on the sale value of your beneficial interest in it at the time of the financial assessment. Beneficial interest means your right to the sale value of the part that you own, on the open market, to a willing buyer. There is legal and beneficial ownership in this context and most people have both.
Jointly owned property is disregarded from the financial assessment for as long as your partner remains living in it after you have moved into residential care.

The issue of jointly held capital in the form of property is dealt with as an exception to the general 50:50 capital rule described above. In the statutory guidance, it describes the local authority’s power to divide a jointly held capital asset equally ‘…except where there is evidence that the person owns an unequal share.’ The charging regulations state that ‘where the adult and one or more other persons are beneficially entitled in possession to any capital asset except an interest in land…each person is to be treated as if each of them were entitled in possession to an equal share of the whole beneficial interest.’ It then states that ‘…the adult’s share of the whole beneficial interest [in property or land] will be the actual share (as determined by the local authority) and is to be treated as if it were actual capital.’ This confirms that property or land must be assessed in the amounts owned rather than divided 50:50.

Note

Where you are a joint beneficial owner of property, meaning you have the right to receive some of the proceeds of its sale, it is your actual beneficial interest in the property that should be taken into account in the financial assessment, not the property as a whole.

If there is a dispute about the value of your beneficial interest, the statutory guidance requires it to be resolved within the initial 12 week property disregard period by the local authority obtaining an independent property valuation. The 12 week period commences from the time the local authority starts providing financial support.

For further information on care home funding and property see factsheet 38, Treatment of property in the means test for permanent care home provision.

3.4 Pension credit rules

If you receive Pension Credit (PC) as a couple, your entitlement changes when either of you permanently enters residential care. The Pension Service treats you as two separate individuals and eligibility for PC depends on your individual levels of income and capital.

If you have an occupational pension, private pension or retirement annuity and decide to pass 50 per cent of it to your partner after you become a permanent resident, the Pension Service counts this as your partner’s income for their individual PC calculation. The Pension Service should also reduce this part of your income calculation by 50 per cent for your own individual PC calculation. See section 5 below for more information on this rule.
Note
The Government is increasing women’s state pension age, which is linked to the PC qualifying age for both men and women. It is increasing from 60 to 65 between 6 April 2010 and November 2018, and will continue to increase, for both men and women, to 67 by October 2028. In April 2016, it is 63 years. However, they have decided to keep the property-related disregard for relatives living with someone who goes into a care home at 60 years of age and over. See our benefits-related factsheets for further information.

4 Where a couple both go into a care home

The local authority financial assessment
The local authority must assess you and your partner as individuals, regardless of whether you go into the same care home together. You should be financially assessed separately, based on your own capital and income, including your share of any jointly held capital assets.

Pension Credit rules
In most cases, if you both enter the same care home on a permanent basis, you are treated as two separate individuals in separate households, even if you share a room. The Pension Service must look at your particular circumstances to decide whether to treat you as two individuals in separate households or a couple in the same household.

Pension Service guidance states that deciding whether a couple are members of the same household is a question of fact and degree. Decision-makers are given examples of what would be useful to consider in deciding whether there is a household:

- structure of days – can you decide when to get up, have meals, go to bed, etc?
- how the accommodation is arranged - do you decide which room is the dining room, the living room, etc?
- can you decide who can come and stay, and for how long?
- can you insist that other people do not enter your accommodation without permission?
- can you decide the decor and furnishing of your accommodation?
- do you have facilities for preparing food and making tea and coffee etc?
- do you have responsibility for running the household - are you responsible for repairs, replacing domestic appliances or buying food?
If there is no household, there cannot be a common household and two separate ‘benefit units’ with a single claimant each will exist. Seek advice if you are inappropriately treated as a couple in this situation.

If you go into different care homes, or live in different sections of a care home registered to provide both accommodation with personal care and accommodation with nursing and personal care, there should be no problem arguing that you should be treated as two separate individuals.

If you treated as a couple for Pension Credit and are being paid the couples rate and you are also eligible for the savings disregard, the authority should also apply its own income disregard of up to £8.60 per week. The equivalent disregard for a single person is £5.75 per week. This is confirmed in the statutory guidance and the charging regulations.

For further information see factsheet 48, Pension Credit.

5 The 50% private pension and annuity disregard

You may have a significantly higher or lower income than your partner. The rules set out below are designed to protect one partner from possible financial hardship as a result of the local authority financial assessment for residential care.

If you enter a care home permanently and you have a personal or private pension, an occupational pension or a retirement annuity, you can choose to pass 50 per cent of it to your partner remaining at home. This amount must be excluded (disregarded) from your local authority financial assessment.

If you have more than one of these types of income, they can be added together to achieve a 50 per cent figure.

Your partner may remain at your previously shared home, or can live anywhere other than the same care home as you.

The disregard does not apply to:

- partners who are neither married nor civil partners (but see the discretion to increase the Personal Expenses Allowance below)
- residents who pass an amount less than 50 per cent of their relevant income to their spouse or civil partner.

The 50 per cent disregard rule is set out in the statutory guidance and within the charging regulations. The Pension Service should recognise this social care disregard rule and assess a resident’s eligibility for Pension Credit as if half of this part of their income is no longer available to them.

If your partner is already legally entitled to part of your private pension (for example, because of a Court Order) then this amount is treated as already belonging to them in the financial assessment. You can then pass 50 per cent of the rest of your private or occupational pension, or annuity, to your partner as described above.
As your local authority can choose to impose permanent means test rules where there is a temporary care home placement, it appears that this disregard could also be accessed at that time for the duration of the placement.

Note
Before deciding whether to take advantage of the 50 per cent disregard, you need to assess whether it actually benefits your partner financially. This is because receiving extra income can have an effect on their entitlement to means tested benefits such as Pension Credit, Housing Benefit or Council Tax Reduction. You can seek advice from one of the advice agencies listed in section 11.

Lasting Power of Attorney

If someone else is managing your finances under a Lasting Power of Attorney or an Enduring Power of Attorney, they can usually decide whether to pass income to your partner, including in situations where they are the person who will receive the money. An exception would be if you (the Donor) have imposed specific restrictions or conditions within the Power of Attorney preventing this power. For more information on mental capacity and powers of attorney see factsheet 22, Arranging for others to make decisions about your finances or welfare.

6 Temporary care home residents

If you or your partner enter a care home on a short-term or temporary basis, your local authority can either charge you as if you are still living at home or in line with the rules for permanent residential care. There are, however, some important differences relating to returning home - see Annex F of the statutory guidance. This could, for example, be a respite break or for short-term rehabilitation.

If you receive Pension Credit (PC) as a couple and one of you enters a care home for a temporary stay, PC continues to be paid as if you were both still at home. The local authority should ignore the amount paid to your partner remaining at home, although they may look at the bank account that PC is paid into, to ensure the financial assessment is carried out accurately.

When assessing how much you should contribute to the care home fees, your local authority must carefully consider the needs of the whole couple. Annex F of the statutory guidance states that local authorities should ensure the partner at home receives an amount equal to the basic level of PC ‘to which they may be entitled in their own right’ and any additional amounts they are entitled to. It states that:
Only the income of the cared-for person can be taken into account in the financial assessment of what they can afford to pay for their care and support. Where this person receives income as one of a couple, the starting presumption is that the cared-for person has an equal share of the income. A local authority should also consider the implications for the cared-for person’s partner.

Whilst you stay in a care home temporarily, allowance should be made for any on-going household expenses you are responsible for. However, if your local authority allows a single person’s rate for the partner remaining at home when apportioning PC, they may expect that household expenses are shared equally and therefore only allow half of the expenses. This allowance may reduce further if there are other non-dependant adults living in the household who could be expected to contribute to the household expenses.

For further information see factsheet 58, Paying for temporary care in a care home.

7 Varying the personal expenses allowance

Your local authority has to allow you or your partner to keep a personal expenses allowance (PEA) of £24.90 per week as part of the financial assessment when you enter a care home permanently. It should not take all of your income when it assists with funding. This income disregard is set out in the charging regulations and statutory guidance.

Your PEA should not be used to pay for your basic care home fees. It is intended for your own personal use.

In each individual case, a local authority can choose to increase the PEA and the statutory guidance provides some illustrative examples of situations where this may be necessary.

If your property is disregarded in the financial assessment, the statutory guidance requires your local authority to:

consider whether the PEA is sufficient to enable the person to meet any resultant costs. For example, allowances should be made for fixed payments (like mortgages, rent and Council Tax), building insurance, utility costs (gas, electricity and water, including basic heating during the winter) and reasonable property maintenance costs.

Therefore, if your local authority decides to increase your PEA, this part of your assessed income can be made available to a partner at home. This can be helpful for couples who are neither married nor are civil partners, and who are therefore not directly covered by the 50 per cent pension/annuity disregard set out in section 5 above.
This is a discretionary power (choice) so the local authority does not have to agree to increase your PEA, but if it refuses your request without properly considering it, you can use the complaints procedure to challenge the decision.

8 If your partner wants to move later on

If your partner remains in your property once you’ve moved into a care home permanently, it is disregarded from your financial assessment. This disregard remains for as long as they remain in the property.

However, your partner may at some point wish to move from that property, perhaps to somewhere smaller and more manageable. Once the original property has been sold, the disregard ends and your share of the proceeds of sale could be taken into account in your financial assessment.

The statutory guidance states that, where necessary, you should be able to use part of your share of the sale proceeds to enable your partner to buy a more suitable property.

Example from statutory guidance

Max has moved into a care home and has a 50 per cent interest in a property that continues to be occupied by his civil partner, David. The value of the property is disregarded whilst David lives there, but he decides to move to a smaller property that he can better manage and so sells their shared home to fund this.

At the time the property is sold, Max’s 50 per cent share of the proceeds could be taken into account in the financial assessment, but, in order to ensure that David is able to purchase the smaller property, Max makes part of his share of the proceeds from the sale available. In such circumstance, it would not be reasonable to treat Max as having deprived himself of capital in order to reduce his care home charges.

The last line above relates to newly released funds that may otherwise have had to be included within an amended financial assessment.

Unmarried partners or other relatives benefiting from a disregard should ask to be treated in the same way.

The statutory guidance does not state how any other capital remaining after the purchase of the new property should be treated and local authorities have adopted different approaches to this.

Further information on property can be found in factsheet 38, Treatment of property in the means test for permanent care home provision.
9 The information and advice duty

The Act requires each local authority to provide people in its area with information and advice relating to care and support. The service must, at the very least, deliver information and advice on the following areas:

- the local care and support system and how it operates
- the choice of types of care and support, and the choice of providers available to those who are in the authority’s area
- how to access the care and support that is available
- how to access independent financial advice on matters relevant to the meeting of needs for care and support, and
- how to raise concerns about the safety or well-being of an adult who has needs for care and support.

The information and advice must be accessible and appropriate to the needs of the types of local people who may require it, for example disability access issues must be considered in line with legal requirements set out in the Equality Act 2010.

10 Complaints and rights

If you are not satisfied with any aspect of the service you receive from a local authority or a care home, you can make a complaint. This can be about the means test, the standard of information and advice, standards of communication, possible delays, and/or the skills and attitudes of the professionals you deal with. You can complain through the local authority complaints procedure or the internal procedure in the care home.

If you arrange and fund your own residential care, you have a right to complain to the Local Government Ombudsman about your care home service. You can also contact the Care Quality Commission, the care home industry regulator, about any concerns you have.

For further information see factsheet 59, How to resolve problems and make a complaint about social care.

Human rights – Home and family life

Article 8 of the Human Rights Act 1998 states that:

> Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.

The British Institute of Human Rights provides the following ‘real-life’ case example to highlight the issue of couples being split up in breach of their human rights when they both need care home accommodation:
Mr and Mrs Driscoll had lived together for over 65 years. He was unable to walk unaided and relied on his wife to help him move around. She was blind and reported that she used her husband as her eyes. They were separated after Mr Driscoll became unwell and was moved into a residential care home. Mrs Driscoll wanted to move to the home with her husband but was told she did not meet the criteria used to by the local authority to allocate places.

Speaking to the media, Mrs Driscoll said ‘We have never been separated in all our years and for it to happen now, when we need each other so much, is so upsetting. I am lost without him – we were a partnership’.

Human rights and older people's organisations pointed out that this was a breach of the couple's right to respect for their home and family life, as protected by the Human Rights Act 1998. A public campaign by the family, supported by various organisations, used human rights arguments to convince the local authority to reconsider its decision. Mrs Driscoll’s needs were reassessed and she was offered a place in the same care home as her husband.
